Dear Susan,

Our offices for Cascade Web Development are located a block from the shores of the Willamette River, and in effort to reduce my contribution to carbon emissions and beat traffic congestion, I have often paddled to work in a kayak. My time on the water has made me wonder why we don't use our waterways as a means to move people around our region. As our economy grows at a rapid rate, I believe we should look at best practices for how we plan to move people, and passenger ferry systems are growing in popularity in places such as Seattle, San Francisco, New Orleans, Boston, New York and Washington D.C.

The Frog Ferry offers an alternative transportation means that can provide one more option for multimodal commuting. I understand that your plan is to start by removing 6,000 autos from our roadway and can imagine that ferries are easily scaled for growth due to the low infrastructure cost. Reducing greenhouse gas emissions is simply vital to our community.

Please consider Cascade Web Development as a supporter and keep us apprised of your progress.

With best wishes,

Ben McKinley
